CBR-UK Runs Smart Campaign

Upwards of 1.1 million homes in the UK received campaign leaflets containing stunning pictures of living preborn babies. This accomplishment is huge and it was explained by CBR-UK's Head of Communications Ruth Rawlins:

Last month, Christian Hacking left CBR-UK to launch his Vote Life project, running independent candidates under the pro-life banner. The project had two main goals, to make abortion a voting issue and to get the beautiful image of a living baby in the womb through the doors of whole constituencies – making the most of the free Royal Mail drop for every candidate.

I was honoured to stand as an independent candidate for Walthamstow, running against Stella Creasy. I have a history of campaigning to expose her extreme abortion policies through my work with CBR-UK. It was a beautiful thing to witness the growing momentum of the 22 individual candidates who were willing to be a public face for the issue. Some had put themselves forward to be paper candidates only, but through the encouragement of watching others step out, many ended up filming campaign videos, as well as speaking at hustings and to the media.

Candidates ranged from Joshua Morland, a student at Warwick University who had never voted before, hosting a student event at his uni on abortion, to Pauline Peachey, a pensioner who runs PASE (Post Abortion Support for Everyone) who went up against pro-abortion Diana Johnson in Hull. Pauline spoke to the BBC “defending” the leaflets that went through the doors. It really has started a powerful movement. <https://bit.ly/4dbuKqU>

The BBC aired a story about Vote Life Project, and it featured Pauline Peachey, an independent candidate for Hull North and Cottingham:

The 78-year-old candidate ... said her experience of having an abortion herself led her to want to help other women. She said the image on the leaflet was ‘just a picture of a baby developing in the womb’ and questioned, ‘What is outrageous about that?’...

According to official statistics published by the Office for Health Improvement and Disparities, there were 251,377 abortions for women resident in England and Wales in 2022. [The 2024 General Election took place July 4.] Hull general election candidate defends abortion leaflet (bbc.com)

CBR-UK volunteers had a tremendous sense of accomplishment as they participated in this campaign. A blessing is that CBR-UK only had to pay for the leaflet printing and bring it to the Royal Post, which delivered them free of charge. May God use this smart project to save many children and their mothers from abortion.

Urban GAP at Market Square 2024

A team of seven staff and five volunteers returned to Knoxville's Market Square on June 28, 2024. This is an excellent venue to educate shoppers and passersby about abortion.

The Genocide Awareness Project (GAP) signs were set up, and then our group stood nearby to answer questions and distribute educational brochures. GAP is constructed of a variety of signs that contain abortion photos, educate about prenatal development, and oppose trans surgeries for minors. We compare the genocide of abortion to other more widely recognized genocides. Our signs are designed to make people think.

CBR Student Outreach Coordinator Cody Levi had an extended conversation with Randy, who couldn't take his eyes off the abortion photos; Randy's remarks shifted from disbelief to anger. Randy saw our security guard (hired by CBR to thwart evil-doers and violent acts) and said, "You're lucky you have security and cameras." He relented from his veiled threat and actually confessed that he had a girlfriend when he was 20, and he never knew she was pregnant until after she had an abortion. It was disturbing that he never had a say until it was too late; but he reimbursed her $400 for aborting their child. After Mr. Levi presented the science of preborn life and they had talked about additional matters related to abortion, Randy said he would think about what they discussed, and admitted that he enjoyed the conversation.

Volunteer Debbie saw a young woman taking photos of all the fetal development stages while talking to someone on her cell phone. Debbie heard her describing the photos, calling them awesome, and stating: "People need to know about this stuff."

CBR staff member Jane Bullington reported that families walked near GAP all day long. Some children looked with interest and others just glanced. Parents who didn't want their children to see the panels just redirected them. A mother with two children came up to the display, and her 12-year-old son asked, "Why does it say, 'We oppose child mutilation'?" The mom proceeded to go around the display, pointing to every picture and explaining their significance. This was good parenting.

Late in the afternoon, a man standing nearby asked in a disappointed tone, "Are they making you take this down?" When CBR staffer Joshua Lindsey, Research Analyst, told him our GAP permit was only through 5:00 pm, he told us, "You need to put this up here often."

Another man told us: "Every time I come to Knoxville for cancer treatments at the VA and see you guys on Market Square, it makes my day." Who would've thought we would make a cancer patient's day with GAP?!

Equipping American and Indian Pro-Lifers with CBR Abortion Photos

As the primary international source of abortion-related photos and videos, pro-life groups and activists contact CBR from around the world, requesting permission to use our photos in their activism, their books, their presentations and more. The following are two recent examples:

A well-known American Christian apologist contacted CBR this past week requesting to use CBR abortion photos in a conference presentation about abortion. His willingness to educate conference-goers with the inclusion of abortion photos needs to happen more often. His presentation almost certainly will bear fruit. After seeing abortion photos, the consciences of viewers are often pricked and they forward the images to others. The result is babies saved.

Several months ago, we received an email from a man in India who is part of a start-up pro-life organization. Interestingly, this is a secular group, but the leaders are troubled by the high abortion rate in India. We have offered them the use of our abortion photos in their educational efforts, and we provided some basic strategy. We are continuing an email dialogue with them to this time. May God help the pro-life Indians be effective in their work. India's population has now surpassed the population of China. In their recent election, one out of eight people on the planet voted! <https://www.bbc.com/news/world-asia-india-68678594>

CBR Changed a Vendor's Mind

The metals fabricator who built the sign display systems for all of our billboard trucks recently told CBR Director of Operations Dr. Kevin Olivier that he did not have an opinion on abortion when he began doing work for CBR. Yet, as he started working with our signs, he realized how horrific abortion is, and this turned him strongly against abortion. God uses our pictures to open eyes and change minds.

AbortionNO.org, CBR's website, was included on the sides of the van driven in the 4th of July Parade in Honolulu, Hawaii. CBR-Hawaii Director Steve Holck was part of the Aloha Pregnancy Center parade entry, and he is the founder of Aloha PC. He took the opportunity to show parade-goers our website.

Mr. Holck texted: "Got abortionNO.org in the huge 4th of July parade. 10,000 people watched. I could hear them reading it... abortionNO.org."
