"I was that [abortion] doctor – What do you think of me?"

Our Genocide Awareness Project had a profound impact at Georgia Institute of Technology in Atlanta, Georgia on April 7-8, 2025.

An older man shockingly, but shrewdly, admitted to CBR Student Outreach Coordinator Cody Levi that he had been an abortionist. He began the conversation by asking Mr. Levi some specific pregnancy scenarios that the average man would not know. Next, Mr. Levi asked him whether he thought elective abortion is wrong. He looked at Mr. Levi and said: "That's the question." He gestured for Mr. Levi to walk with him around the display and he stopped at the abortion doctor sign that compares abortionists to Nazi doctors. He said: "I was that [abortion] doctor. What do you think of me?" Mr. Levi told him that knowing and intentionality makes the difference. He let that sink in briefly, with pain and emptiness in his eyes, and possible weak remorse. The man finally took Mr. Levi to another sign and said: "That's not what a 10-week abortion looks like." Mr. Levi clarified: "That is what it looks like 10 weeks dating from fertilization." The doctor replied, "Ah, yes..." He patted Mr. Levi's shoulder and walked away.

Mr. Levi wrote further about this chilling experience:

> I've never met someone that broken to grieve me to uncontrollable tears, mostly from his presence and his own realization and torment. A Christmas Carol describes the weight as a physical set of chains and balls that you drag around for the rest of eternity, but it's much different. The weight on a soul is more painful and different than a physical burden to carry. It's a weight on the conscience, but also still more. The very core of one's soul seems to cry out from this level of turmoil. It's not like any moral wrong being committed. This one feels qualitatively different. It's like a piece of [his] own soul was being eaten away, with less and less remaining. A living lake of soulful fire. And imagine that individual walking away, when you are there to help people, but you don't know how to help this individual. They just… walk away, slip away… And it's the worst thing to watch. He can only be helped through Christ.

We never know who will approach the GAP display and what their stories are, because many people have abortion stories. Our huge photo display compares abortion with other forms of genocide and related bio-ethical abuses. GAP provides people with an opportunity to speak. We believe that God brought this former abortionist by GAP that day and pray He is drawing him to repentance.

This photo shows the huge footprint GAP bring to campuses, and why we select busy pedestrian pathways to maximize our visibility. At Georgia Tech, the campus administrators placed this white free speech sign on the path to instruct students about their free speech rights and responsibilities, and to tell them we have the right to be on a public campus.

GAP causes some people to actually take time to think about the slaughter of preborn babies. A tall student studied each photo and then admitted, "It's a tragedy. I've never thought much about it." He took a brochure from CBR staff member Jane Bullington and promised to read it and give the issue some serious thought.

Volunteer Pam conversed with "Abel" who wanted to know if children weren't better off dead than born into a bad situation where they will suffer. She helped Abel discuss choices and consequences and trusting God with our lives. Abel seemed encouraged and thanked Pam for the conversation. What other pro-life project might prompt these kinds of deep discussions with college students?

An aerospace engineering student spoke with CBR GAP Director Brad Martel; he went from the position that he couldn't really have an opinion because he is not a woman, to understanding abortion is wrong.

CBR Project Manager Caleb Johnson chatted over the course of the two days of GAP with a pro-choice girl named "Lisa". She was intellectually honest, so Mr. Johnson shared his post-abortion story. Mr. Johnson told her that time doesn't heal the wounds of abortion; it makes those wounds eat you alive. He said he's been in rooms full of people who regret their abortions, no matter the "good reasons" they chose abortion. Lisa has had a hard life, so she became an atheist because "I'm the only one who's ever had my back." One day two, Lisa reported to Mr. Johnson she'd told her pro-choice student group about his personal experience and all the other people who deeply regretted their abortions. Lisa said something to the effect that it had made the student group rethink their position and soften their attitude towards pro-lifers. She would not permit Mr. Johnson to talk to her about Jesus, but through tears she gave him a friendly hug as she walked away. We trust and pray that she will come to know the Lord.

Excellent people volunteered with GAP. Vincent, a new volunteer, drove over from North Carolina. One notable conversation Vincent had was with "George," a student who approached him and presented cases where he thought abortion is necessary. Vincent then gave an analogy about how you'd hit the car brakes if something ran in front of you as you were driving and you weren't sure if it was human or not. Finally George replied: "You have me stumped." Vincent found our stages of prenatal development sign helpful during that conversation.

CBR Student Outreach Coordinator Amanda Levi (at left) speaks with students who have questions about our Genocide Awareness Project at Georgia Tech in April.

A woman from Georgia Right to Life did an amazing job of engaging students in conversations. A Georgia Tech student stopped to pray with other students for whom she discerned needed prayer. We thank God for those who are courageous to stand with CBR as we expose the horror of abortion as well telling them about God having a better plan – LIFE.

These are the kinds of babies whose organs Planned Parenthood was accused of harvesting alive.

Harvesting organs from born and preborn humans

The New York Times ran a front-page story on July 21, 2025 titled: "A Push for More Organ Transplants Is Putting Donors at Risk."

We addressed this horrifying practice of removing organs from living "donors" in our March 2024 CBR Communique, in an article titled: "Protect Your Organs and Your Life – Do Not Sign up as an Organ Donor." Please read it online if you missed it. This is a serious bio-ethical matter that could affect you and your family. https://bit.ly/452DGMO

The New York Times reported: "People across the United States have endured rushed or premature attempts to remove their organs. Some were gasping, crying or showing other signs of life." When Gregg Cunningham, CBR Executive Director, read the article, he decided to email David Daleiden of centerformedicalprogress.org :

July 22, 2025

Hello David,

The New York Times article below (July 21, 2025) documents the harvesting from living "donors" of organs for transplantation in scenarios which mirror Planned Parenthood's harvesting from living newborn babies of fetal organs for research. Thank you again, David, for your courageous work in exposing these PP horrors.

We ask: how do these atrocities differ from the Chinese government's practice of warehousing political prisoners and then harvesting their organs as the "need" arises?

How can our pastors sleep at night when their silence is helping facilitate this demonic debacle?

Notes from Supporters

"I enjoyed the webinar [CBR's Colonel of Truth]. Can't remember when I first started supporting CBR... I'm now 91… I got interested in the pro-life/anti-abortion movement around 1980, praying outside a clinic...Now all I can do is support CBR and a local pro-life outfit and... CBR continues to change more minds than any of the others. Keep up the good work! Love and prayers." A.H.

"Please use this gift to support your ministry on college campuses and for church-based prenatal science displays. We live in a visual culture…" X

Former abortionist at Georgia Tech GAP

A former abortionist saw this GAP sign that asks: "Who bears criminal responsibility?" (See Georgia Tech story.) We hold the position that the woman who aborts should not be held criminally liable, but the abortionist should.
